

You just close your eyes and you draw the last picture you capture.

You let yourself be struck by lines and you just draw the lines.

Just to look more carefully to the things and to know where you are and it's a way of analysing any kind of situation where you feel a little lost or you want to understand more about what surrounds you.

You have been living in those elements from the time you where born so if you know how to draw, that can refresh your vision of things. Then when you know how to draw you find it just like everything and so you do something else.

Just a moment when you stop, you draw.

I have a bad eye, I am never sure about what I have seen and so if I can draw then there is evidence of what I have felt while I was seeing.

If you know how to draw you can stop and draw for a minute to get more consciousness of what you have seen.

Et voila!